

Information collected on this site depends solely on the user.

If you visit our site to read or download information, such as information about the OIG or one of our reports:

We collect and store the name of the domain from which you accessed the Internet (e.g. aol.com if you connect from an America Online account, or princeton.edu if you connect from Princeton University's domain), the date and time you accessed our site, and the Internet address of the website from which you linked directly to our site. This information is part of a systems log file but not stored in any particular fashion. We do not store any personal identifiers.

We collect this information for site management and statistical purposes. We use software programs to create summary statistics that assess the most and least interesting content, determine technical design specifications, and identify system performance or problem areas. The collected information measures the number of visitors to the different sections of our site and helps us make our site more useful. This information is used for internal management purposes only.

If you identify yourself by sending an email or sending us an online form:

You may send us personally-identifying information (e.g. an email containing a complaint). We use personally-identifying information from customers to further our customer's protection and to provide better service. Any information collected via email or online form may be subject to disclosure but will be handled in accordance with the requirements of the Privacy Act and the Freedom of Information Act to ensure the greatest protection of personal privacy.

We only collect personally-identifying information when the user provides such information. We do not disclose any personally-identifying information we receive except as required by law.
